

Call for applications

Residency program for artists at the House of France in Rhodes - Research Residency on Contemporary Ceramics

Deadline for applications: July 3rd, 2022

The French Institute of Greece launches a call for applications for its research residency program on contemporary ceramics at the House of France in Rhodes.

The House of France in Rhodes is located in the medieval heart of the city of Rhodes. It welcomed knights who were passing through the island. In 1912, the House was bought by a French ambassador in Turkey who offered it to the French state. Today it hosts the Consular Agency of France.

Ceramics has been present in Rhodes since antiquity but it was not until 1929 that the activity experienced its full development with the production of I.C.A.R.O (Industrie Ceramiche Artistiche Rodio - Orientali), which has generated a revival of a fine and qualitative ceramics industry. This model comes from a tradition of Faïenza and was established on the island when it was under Italian domination (inspired by Iznik known as Lindos plates). This ceramic activity continued after the Second World War and formed a community of ceramists, workers, connaisseurs and collectors on the island.

Today the local production disappears in favor of copies of ceramics from Iznik or Ikaros. The tradition remains but the renewal of generations and the transmission of know-how are threatened. Local authorities are invested to preserve and valorize this intangible heritage; The French Embassy brings its support.

This program encourages the crossover between the existing cultural heritage and the contemporary issues of ceramic art. The residency aims to offer to the artists a field of creation and experimentation in connection with the historical environment and the discovery of traditional know-how.

The 2022 artists' residency will host up to three laureates invited to Rhodes for a two-month residency: the artists are expected to establish working relationships between them, with the island's artistic circles as well as with local craftsmen.

The elaboration of ceramic works will be punctuated by learning traditional techniques from masters and artists and by meetings with local craftsmen.

This residency also aims to create links with contemporary artists from Rhodes. The invited artists will benefit from an artistic local network.

The French Institute of Greece is supported by the Region of South Aegean Sea, the Ministry of Culture and collaborates with the School of Fine Arts of Athens for the reception of the selected artists in the annex of Rhodes in the Palace of the Great Masters. The program is carried out with the logistical support of the French Consulate in Rhodes.

This residency program is addressed to artists, women and men, Greek and French artists as well as artists of the Mediterranean countries who wish to develop an artistic research project on contemporary ceramics.
